What is Identity?

The Self & Social Identities:

Week 1: Who am I?

Identity Speed Dating

Round 1: What's one identity you thought about or included on your name card?

Round 2: What's an identity you have that people might not guess by looking at you?

Round 3: What's an identity that has become more or less important since coming to Duke?

Round 4: What's an identity that changes how you behave depending on who you're with?

Round 5: What's something you consider part of your identity that someone else might call merely an interest, preference, or trait?

What did you notice?

- Did different prompts make different identities salient?
- Did who you were talking to affect what you shared?
- Were some identities easier to explain than others?
- Did anything you heard change your definition of “identity”?

Why Am I Making You Write?

- 🧠 Writing forces you to think
  Make connections. Notice contradictions. Decide what you believe.
- ✍️ Writing develops your voice
  Your writing shouldn't sound perfect. It should sound like you.
- 💭 Struggle is part of learning
  The sentence you rewrite five times isn't wasted time. That's the work.
- 👤 Your ideas are part of your identity
  If this class asks "Who am I?", then outsourcing your thinking means giving up part of the process we're here to study.
- I would rather read YOUR imperfect thinking than AI's perfect prose.
